Canine distemper (CD) caused by canine distemper virus (CDV) is an infectious viral disease of dogs and can be lethal if untreated. CDV can be propagated in Madin-Darby canine kidney (MDCK) cells and a clinical isolate of CDV from a dog with CD was used to propagate MDCK cells in this study. PCR and Southern blot analysis showed that the cells were infected by CDV. The growth kinetics of the infected cells was studied. On the basis of the mean survival times of the control and infected cells, the CDV infected MDCK cells showed cytopathic effects and cell lysis. To achieve viral titers of high titers, to study on the significance of the CDV phosphoprotein gene (P) gene in the pathogenesis of CD, the CDV gene was modified by site directed mutagenesis in vivo using the gene encoding the P gene of a virus with a known number of nucleotides, and the impact of the mutation on the viral replication and pathogenesis of the virus was studied in vivo. The data showed that the replication ability and the virulence of the P gene-modified virus were not affected by the mutation in the P gene. These results showed that the P gene of CDV is not essential for viral replication and the CDV P gene does not affect the pathogenesis of CD.Q: How do I split a string in the text field using JQuery
