Bottega Veneta is making a comeback, and this time, it's with a new collection. > February 9, 2018 By Jess T. Levy Reuters Reuters CHICAGO >> The house where Bottega Veneta made its name as a label that dressed iconic Italian characters like Audrey Hepburn and Sophia Loren has given new meaning to the term "classic Italian style." The nearly 40-year-old label, the brainchild of designer Miuccia Prada and revived by current chief executive officer Patrizio Bertelli, is revisiting the brand's archives for a retro look of midcentury modern décor and heritage-inspired fabrics. A video showing the new approach was unveiled on Tuesday in Milan, where Bottega runs its best-known and most expensive stores and outlet shops, as well as in New York, London and Los Angeles. "A lot of the things have an industrial feel," said Javier Mendez, a fashion adviser at luxury store Saks Fifth Avenue who has been following Bottega's new design direction. "I think it's a great update because nothing is happening in the same way anymore, and Bottega has maintained that uniqueness." Bottega is known for its quirky and avant-garde approach, a hallmark of its best-known clothes. Prada has said she wants to capture what she believes is the essence of Bottega by giving the
