Produced from 1955 to 1961, the Omega engine was initially used as the basis for the more powerful OM series. The Omega engine was developed from the de Havilland Gipsy engine used in the Citroën 2CV, and was first developed by the then-homonymous company as the C-12 and C-14 engines. These were followed by the C-16 and C-18 engines, and the final Omega engine, the C-20. The engine was developed with an oil sump, a rotary ignition coil, and a two-speed carburetor. The engine is now known as the de Havilland Gipsy engine, because OM won the French automobile manufacturer prize in 1958. OM is also the current owner of the de Havilland aircraft 2d92ce491b
