◆exorbitant privilege” of the most toxic situations, and deflects our attention from the basis of the problem (the establishment of a violent, racist state) to the death of one individual. I want to close with an example that illustrates a different aspect of Bush’s thinking. On March 14, 2003, a secret memo written by Deputy Secretary of Defense Paul Wolfowitz and distributed to the White House was leaked to the press. The memo argued that Iraq’s president, Saddam Hussein, was intent on attacking the United States of America; that the United States was right to remove Saddam and replace him with a pro-U.S. government; and that the greatest threat to U.S. security was weapons of mass destruction and not al-Qaida. The memo — at least in its later, leaked form — was wrong on all three counts. Saddam, the memo argued, was a brutal dictator, not a terrorist; he was an ally of al-Qaida, not an enemy; and he had no weapons of mass destruction to threaten the United States. Nevertheless, the memo suggested that the White House didn’t actually care whether Saddam possessed WMD or al-Qaida did; that the terrorist threat was secondary; and that the real threat to the United States was Saddam’s autocratic regime. I would argue that this attitude, of regarding Iraq as an objective rather than a subject of humanity, is extremely dangerous. Rather than alienating the Iraqi people and thereby encouraging them to rise up against Saddam, it would make the situation in Iraq even more volatile. The same goes for the attitude of viewing ourselves as subjects of no interest to anyone but U.S. domestic politics. We cannot justify American military interventions on the grounds that we’re fighting for democracy or freedom, or that we’re doing so in the name of humanity, or in the name of the United Nations, or because it’s the “right thing” to do. I doubt that this is what Bush or Cheney were thinking when they decided to invade Iraq, but it surely influenced their decisions and their attitudes in the immediate aftermath of the attack. A.N. Georges Vanier (politician) Georges Vanier (8 April 1880 – 6 February 1972) was a Canadian lawyer and politician in the province of Quebec. Born in Montreal, Vanier was educated at the Séminaire de Saint-Laurent and was called to the Bar of Quebec in 1902. He was elected to the House of Commons of Canada in the 1908 federal election as a Liberal candidate in the riding of Saint-Maurice—Champlain. A Liberal-Unionist, he was re-elected in the 1911, 1917, 1921 and 1925 federal elections. In the 1930 election, he was defeated by Maurice Lalonde. In the 1931 election, he was elected to the Legislative Assembly of Quebec as a Liberal in the provincial district of Montréal-Laval. He was re-elected in the 1936 election. He served as a backbench supporter of Maurice Duplessis's Union Nationale government in the legislature. He was defeated in the 1939 election. The signs and symptoms associated with Down syndrome can be mild or severe. There is a wide range of cognitive deficits, including mental retardation, linguistic deficits, attention deficits, and early appearance of psychopathology. The etiology of Down syndrome remains unknown. Approximately half of the patients show some level of under-masculinization. The under-masculinization is typically not symmetric. The hypothesis to be tested is that one or more genes on chromosome 21 may be responsible for the under-masculinization characteristic of Down syndrome. The objective of the present study is to begin to sort out the genes of interest by mapping linkage between chromosomal markers and a number of under-masculinization phenotypes. This study is an attempt to establish a base line against which to compare the gene map in those Down patients with no chromosomal abnormality.Hey, that’s not a good idea. I feel myself go into
