Usage Instructions: Next Image, Prev Image ( is a premium, SEO friendly, ready-to-use plugin that will allow you to have a looping image navigation with tons of options and useful features. Requirements: Description: Usage Instructions:Q: Why can't I change the filename in the output of fwrite? #include #include void main() { FILE *myfile; char teststring[] = "Hello, world"; int i = 0; myfile = fopen("testfile.txt", "w"); if (myfile == NULL) { printf("Unable to open file "); return; } fprintf(myfile, teststring); fclose(myfile); printf("the original text is:

%s ", teststring); teststring[5] = 'a';
printf("the modified text is: %s ", teststring);
fprintf(myfile, teststring); fclose(myfile);
printf("the file contents are: %s ", teststring);
fseek(myfile, 0, SEEK_SET);
fread(teststring, 5, 1, myfile); fclose(myfile);
printf("the contents of the file are: %s ", teststring); }

The code compiles fine, but there is no difference between testfile.txt and testfile.txt Any ideas? A: If you look at your code in context, you will see that the fread() and fwrite() are interwoven, each call from fread() overwriting the buffer of the previous write.
