Alpha Clock is a clock for your desktop that allows you to create your own skins and has a utility that can change the color of the clock. Has a nice interface, and is highly customizable It offers its users a plethora of customization options, including replacing the default clock face and many other functionalities. However, even though the interface is quite nice, it doesn't use any advanced graphics, so you may find its minimalistic design either very appealing, or totally boring. The application is able to deliver its functionality with straightforwardness. You'll be able to arrange the clock's location either on the left or right side of your desktop, select a clock face from a dozen available images, set your preferred time format, lock the calendar, and use your own alarm sound, among other functions. The application displays alarms you can set on the clock, along with the date. You should know that the alarm settings aren't really customizable, as they are just set to an hour, but you can change it, if you really wish. You can also arrange the alarm on the clock for different days of the week, and set the same time for all of them, instead of having to manually adjust them every time. What's more, you're able to set multiple alarms, up to 8, and once you're done, save them in the calendar. You can also use the application's built-in utility to change the date of the clock, or turn its display off. The application is also quite easy to use, and even though it doesn't have any direct keyboard shortcuts, it allows you to create the next event by clicking on the right mouse button. Display a total of 1224 images Alpha Clock doesn't provide any audio customization options for the alarm sounds, but that's a minor quibble. Actually, it displays a total of 1224 images on your desktop, along with a clock. Changing the clock display Let's start with the clock function. You can choose from a variety of styles, which include default, portrait, landscape, and skeleton. Each image can be arranged in different ways, with the help of different sliders, and you can even replace the background with a certain image, or customize the picture in the upper right corner.
