Simple and concise technique for constructing mice carrying targeted mutations with the polyoma virus middle T antigen. The middle T antigen (mT) of the polyoma virus is required for the high incidence of primary tumors in mice.

In this study, we describe an efficient method for constructing mutant mice with the target gene disrupted.

V(L)J-recombination inserts a promoterless neomycin phosphotransferase (NeoR) gene downstream of the target gene, resulting in a neo-resistant allele of the target gene in the context of the endogenous gene. We show that V(L)J-mediated recombination is induced by a double lacZ insertion into the V(D)J region of the CDR rearrangements of the Ig heavy-chain locus in mouse embryonic stem (ES) cells. We then performed homologous recombination mediated by the Flp-mediated transposition of a targeting vector in which the target gene was flanked by sequence homologous to the 5' end of the
