So, how can you run Photoshop on a Raspberry Pi? Well, you can get a really basic model for as low as $30, and it is capable of running just about anything that's run on a computer. It's perfect for those who want to get into editing images or run Photoshop part time or even full time. In this article, we'll be looking at how you can run Photoshop CS5 on the Raspberry Pi. NOTE: This tutorial is based on the Raspberry Pi Model B "A/B" [US] and will work with the first model B if you swap the ARM9 [ARM] chip out for the new ARM7 [ARM7]. The process of installing Photoshop CS5 on the Raspberry Pi Model B is the same for the Model A version, but you won't be able to change anything using the hardware buttons. Let's get started with the first step: Step 1: Acquiring the Raspberry Pi. The first thing we need to do is acquire the Raspberry Pi from one of the many online retailers that sell them. We will purchase this Pi from Amazon.com for $30 plus $5 shipping. Step 2: Installing Raspbian. Once we have our Raspberry Pi, it's time to start installing Raspbian, a Linux distribution that was designed to be the operating system for the Raspberry Pi. Raspbian is a Debian-based distribution, a family of Linux distributions that share a common upstream software base, and runs on the ARM architecture. When you first power on the Raspberry Pi, you will need to set the time and date, then take a moment to configure the Wi-Fi connection. After this is done, you will be able to log in with the default username and password "pi" and the "raspi" user. It's not recommended that you set a password when you first configure the Pi because this will interfere with the default "ro" permissions, but if you want to you can. Once you are on Raspbian, you can log in the Raspberry Pi to access the web-based recovery console to run setup. Step 3: Logging into Raspbian. Open the web browser and log into the Raspberry Pi as follows: (for example, if your Pi is located in the 192.168.42.0/24 network) (for example, if your Pi is located in the 192.168

Adobe Photoshop Classic and Photoshop Lightroom are two alternative to the Creative Cloud based software. It's far more complex than Photoshop Elements, but it allows you to open more than one image at a time, zoom, and rotate the canvas in any direction. It's perfect if you want full control over your image. Adobe Photoshop is the most popular image editor available and it contains many features. It's also the most expensive. It is good for professional and semi-professional users. Adobe Photoshop Lightroom is a low-cost alternative to Photoshop. You can download the software for free, but it is designed for pros with a need to manage high-volume image libraries. Other image editing applications such as Aviary, GIMP and Pixlr, now have built-in features for editing and retouching photos in the web browser. You can also use these apps with your phone or tablet, as well as any other device. Note: you can't use a Pixel device with Photoshop or other Creative Cloud apps. They are built to work with a specific hardware configuration. Any of these free photo editing tools could be the one for you, so download it and see for yourself! Chris Fox, CP24.com It's been a decade since the University of Toronto shut down its campus radio station. But on Thursday at noon, students at the School of Continuing Studies finally get a chance to listen to their radio station again. In a ceremony at the university's Dunfield campus, representatives from the university's campus radio station as well as U of T's Vice President for Communications and Marketing, Alanna Duguid will officially re-launch "UT Radio" at a gathering at Lansdowne Lodge. Launched in August 2001, the station previously broadcasted an eclectic mix of styles of music. At the time of the station's suspension in 2011, the station's Director for Campus Programming, Allan McGhie told CP24 the station lost about $100,000 a year, citing the increased cost of music licenses. McGhie told CP24 in August 2011 that it was difficult for the station to continue broadcasting given that both the radio station and the school were funded by the university. "With the loss of our funding, we were unable to generate revenue that would allow us to continue providing a service to students and the community. It was a very challenging time to say the least," he said. But Duguid says the reopening of the campus radio station will, in fact, be a catalyst to increase the university's outreach. "We've been working towards this day for a while and it's a very exciting time for us to reopen the program. The fact that this is happening in our centennial year is very special," she told CP24. Students will be given a chance to perform on the radio airwaves Roughly 300 students will be given a chance to submit material for the station to air, while a select group of students will be invited to perform on the air. "My expectation is the atmosphere will be like it was many years ago," McGhie said. "We don't want to lose that atmosphere of playful student radio." While Duguid admits that there will be some changes to the station's format as it moves forward, she said she also doesn't plan to completely reinvent the wheel. "I don't expect it to
