How do I pass a Button's "CommandParameter" property value to a ViewModel in XAML? I have a Button that I add to a ContentControl. When I set Command="{Binding CommandBindings.PreviewCommand}" on the button, it works fine, but it doesn't pass the CommandParameter as the button's text content. I can set CommandParameter="{Binding}" on the button to fix this, but it throws a binding error. Is there a way to bind a ViewModel to a Button and set it's Command parameter through the XAML button? A: If you're setting the Command on the button, then it's already bound to the CommandParameter - all you need to do is set its CommandParameter. However, if you need to have the Command bound to the DataContext of the Button, you need to explicitly set the CommandParameter. You can do this by manipulating the PlacementTarget as suggested.

BindingContext of the Button If you're going to set the Command on the button, then do this (note that you can use two-way binding and a RelativeSource trick to bind to the DataContext - it's equivalent to the SetBinding method): PlacementTarget of the Button If you're going to set the Command on the Button and you don't want it to use the CommandParameter, then instead of using the above example, use the PlacementTarget instead: Mining, agriculture, and the human microbiome: a comprehensive review.
