Here are the highlights: Local Audio: Play your own music stored on local devices, including Android, desktop and NAS. Playlists: Create, search and manage playlists, even in a shared album. Flexible Playback: Play through your own Playlist, or discover a song recommended by Google on demand. Local Audio: Play your own music stored on local devices, including Android, desktop and NAS. We're constantly exploring and developing new ways to help make your digital music available and easy to access on multiple platforms, and with the new Google Play Music web client, you can now play your music from a computer or laptop anywhere you go — from work to school, and at any of your own personal collection. Access all your own music, wherever you are. With the new web client, you can play any song you've stored on your Google Play Music account (or any free storage of your choice), like MP3, M4A, AAC and FLAC files from either a desktop, Android device, or NAS (Network Attached Storage). To get started, click the menu icon on your desktop and select "Music & Playlists," or open the Google Play Music web client via a URL like the one below: You can also access your music from within your browser via the client, which is where Google Music will open by default. Playlists. Our Web Client also lets you easily play, create and manage playlists — the perfect way to organize your music into a structure that works for you. Create a new playlist by dragging and dropping your music into one of the many playlist templates we've provided for you, or make your own by dragging the music you want to listen to and creating your own! Flexible Playback. Keep your music with you, no matter where you go. Now you can play through your own playlist or a song you've selected while at the office, during a lunch break,

When you're running an online service, like YouTube Music, there are numerous things to deal with. Especially if you want to achieve optimal performance. Before that, however, you need to consider a few other fundamental items, such as security, reliability, and availability. YouTube Music Desktop App can help you with those needs, because it can keep your browser sessions free from bottlenecks and can ensure continuous operation. If you use YouTube Music on multiple devices, the app can assign one account ID to each device, meaning that you can log in on different devices using the same username and password. On the other hand, if you do not have any particular use for the YouTube Music Desktop App, you may prefer simply using the browser version. However, it is still advisable to have the YouTube Music Desktop App installed on your PC/Mac for the reasons mentioned above. Indeed, if you are a regular YouTube user, then you will be familiar with the web version and will probably feel more comfortable using that. However, if you want to access your YouTube Music subscriptions on devices such as Android tablets or mobile phones, you will need the desktop client. What's New In?

YouTube Music Desktop App is an Electron-based application that provides users with an alternative, enabling them to access the service directly from a desktop app. It is a simple wrapper around the web UI, so nothing too spectacular, but it does the job. Listen to YouTube Music from your desktop Assuming your country is among those where YouTube Music is available, and you have used the service before, this desktop application will not seem too different. The UI is essentially identical to that of the web service, as the app is just an Electron wrapper for the website. One difference is that you can view any song's lyrics by clicking the button on the right side of the title bar. The lyrics window can be moved around, and it isn't minimized with the application. Support for media keys and taskbar controls One big advantage this application has over the web service is the ability to use media keys. You can play, pause, and switch tracks using just your keyboard, and the app can even display desktop notifications on track changes. Moreover, some simple media controls, along with like and dislike buttons, are embedded into the taskbar preview. Just hover over the taskbar icon to bring up the controls to play/pause, change tracks and like or dislike the song. Minimalistic desktop client for YouTube Music (Testimonial) by Skynfan Sure to be huge when its released, Google's now-tentative YouTube Music Desktop App may be a step in the right direction. If you're a fan of YouTube's web-based service, the app could be a convenient addition to your desktop browsing workflow, all without leaving your browser. Whether or not you choose to use the desktop app will depend largely on how much you like how YouTube currently serves your music. If you enjoy its standard view, the desktop app might not be for you. But we can't say for sure until it's released. * Required information Your Email: Your Phone Number: We promise not to share, rent, or sell your
